Cardinal O'Connell's efforts to prevent Cardinal Mercier from being honored in like manner, an effort which Pope Benedict XV blocked.

M. Goemaere's comments on prohibition are so inaccurate as to provoke mirth. Inhabitants of the Rocky Mountain States will rejoice to know that they are "half savage." Our women generally will be pleased to learn that love does not occupy much space in their lives; and of our population as a whole it is said that we do not know how to collect our thoughts to commune with ourselves and to be stirred by inward contemplation. In short, as M. Goemaere sees us, we "grow old without living." Here is an acute "impressionistic" judgment of a car-window philosopher which will withstand scrutiny. But hardly have you responded affirmatively to this dictum than you have to dissent from another quite as untrue, namely, that "as Americans have no history, so they have no traditions." European statesmen now dealing with the Secretary of State in Washington know better.
